Presenter : DOCER

Tea Table/ Coffee Table

The tea table originated in ancient China. In early times, people sat directly on the floor for tea gatherings, known as tea seating (Cha Xi). Later, tea beds and low tables similar to today's tea tables appeared, with related terms recorded as early as the Tang Dynasty. During the reign of Emperor Huizong of the Song Dynasty, paintings already depicted small black square lacquer tables used for tea serving. In the Ming and Qing Dynasties, tea tables featured carefully selected materials, elegant designs, and exquisite carving craftsmanship, becoming not only functional furniture but also valuable works of traditional art.

They withstand trends and associate well with different styles, and they can be passed on from one home to the next, carrying over the stories of one lifetime to another.

A table and chairs, a shared meal.

The dining room is not only a place for dining, but also a space where families spend quality time together.

A dining area is an essential part of every home. It reflects the Chinese appreciation for food culture while providing a warm space for communication, connection, and sharing moments with loved ones. In many people's childhood memories, the dining table appears more often than the sofa — it is where families gathered for meals, where homework was completed, where children created handmade crafts with friends, and where parents read books and newspapers...

A simple table can carry countless family emotions and memories, capturing the warmth and beauty of everyday life.

As lifestyles continue to evolve, people are paying more attention to the details of home living. To fully enhance the function and experience of the dining space, a large dining table alone is not enough — sideboards and dining chairs have become equally important elements, adding both practicality and style to the room.
